After much deliberation, this Cincinnati couple decided that they desired a dacha to celebrate her Ukrainian and Russian heritage. Inspired by the 1965 film "Dr. Zhivago," specifically about an abandoned dacha, they spent $2.9 million creating a second house of their dreams for weekends. Situated on hundreds of acres of wooded property, this seclusion has offered them and their family the perfect way to escape city life. Resembling a giant mushroom in the middle of the woods, this timber structure features three cupolas – one reaching 40 feet in height – that allows roofs of differing levels to be experienced. Above the main living spaces, a double-height stone fireplace is a prominent feature to see.

Jerry will articulate every square inch and detail which combined in the creation of this masterpiece. He will discuss the many considerations that allowed the home to become a reality. We are most fortunate to visit an exceptional home.
